Morris Animal Foundation Invites Golden Retrievers and Their Owners to Participate in Groundbreaking Study to Improve Health of Dogs

Open Enrollment Has Begun and Only 3,000 Dogs Will Be Accepted

DENVER, Sept 25, 2012 (Globe Newswire) – Golden Retriever owners across the country are invited to apply to participate in the Golden Retriever Lifetime Study, the largest and longest observational study ever undertaken to improve the health of dogs. Morris Animal Foundation, the nonprofit organization running the study, will enroll 3,000 Golden Retrievers over the next two years. To qualify, dogs must be under 2 years of age and in good health. Owners can register their dogs at www.CanineLifetimeHealth.org.

Dogs accepted into the study will participate for their entire lives, and during that time, owners and veterinarians will provide health, nutritional and environmental information about the dogs. This observational information will help scientists identify ways to better prevent cancer and other diseases in Golden Retrievers. The information learned from these dogs is also expected to improve the health of all dog breeds.

“This study requires a long-term commitment from dog owners and their veterinarians,” said Michael Guy, DVM, MS, PhD study director. “We have the potential to learn valuable information that will not only improve canine health but will also significantly advance the entire field of veterinary medicine.”

“We have lost two out of six Golden Retrievers to various types of cancer,” said Valerie Robson and Greg Vowels, whose young dog Astro will

On Saturday, September 29th, our club hosted the annual "Super Singles" at Carol Lantiegne's property, Echoewood, in Mexico. Thanks to Maxine Clark and the assistance of Suzi McDonald, the day was well organized for all to enjoy. (On a side note, I would add that several people thought my email about "Super Singles" was spam! We all laughed at that.)

impressive to see the improvement in so many dogs over a year's time. All the dogs completed the marks to the final one. The last mark was well over 200 yards and went down a hill, through a pond between two islands, up a steep bank, up another hill and over a dirt road to the mark. It was very challenging. A few dogs were able to do the mark without any assistance and several completed it with just a little help. It was very impressive.

We had the added pleasure of a cool, crisp and sunny day that was perfect for retriever training. It was the kind of day and atmosphere that a golden retriever club event is all about. We laughed a lot, cheered a lot and just had fun with our friends and dogs. There were 16 dogs doing the marks. It was also

All in all, it was a wonderful day for dogs and people alike.

2013 GRCCNY Specialty

Will You "Sponsor" a Class?

It's 9 months until our April 2013 Specialty but our Trophy List has to be submitted this fall. Instead of providing trophies to the class winners, our Club sends a donation to the Golden Retriever Foundation. This donation is an accumulation of the contributions of our members. Our Club is proud of our members who make these donations instead of presenting "hardware" trophies at the Specialty.

If you are able to support a class, contact Carol Allen at (315) 469-7926 or carosal@twcny.rr.com. Select a class and ask if it's still available. Mention if you wish to have your donation "in memory of" or "in honor of". All we need now are pledges; we'll send you a reminder in the spring when the pledged amount is due.

Many thanks to our members who have already pledged: Allen, Berry, Byrns, Clark, Coleman, Cox, Gray, Greenfield, Lynn, McDonald, McCloskey, Mickinkle, Mueller, Shelmidine, Tyler, Vassallo and Wood.

The number in ($) is the minimum pledge for that class. A greater amount may be pledged if that is your wish.

In future years, additional attachments will be awarded for each additional title. Awards are presented at the Club's annual Holiday & Awards Banquet each December.

Estate Planning Should Include Pets

by Jennifer Coates, DVM

Many of my clients love their pets like they are children, but I wonder what percentage of them have made provisions for their pets' care should they (the owners not the pets) die unexpectedly. Not many, I'd guess. I haven't either, but I'm going to change that as soon as my husband and I update our wills this summer.

Think about it. What would happen to your pets if you were suddenly out of the picture? Most of us probably assume that a family member or friend would step in and do whatever was needed. But without proper preparation, that is a lot to ask, and who's to say that the person that does end up with your pets is going to treat them the way you want them to be treated?

I recently heard about a tragic case here in Fort Collins that occurred after a pet owner died unexpectedly. He didn't have friends or family in the area and by the time word of his death reached the people in town who knew he had cats that he loved deeply, his pets had already been transported to the local "shelter" and euthanized after the legal wait time, thereby compounding the tragedy.

You can prevent something like this from happening to your pets by including them in your estate planning. I'm no lawyer, but here are a few of the basics:

1. Mention in your will where you want your pets to go. Of course, you should first confirm that your pet's new owner or sheltering organization will be willing to take on this responsibility. Also, know that just because your will states that your sister will get your cat, it in no way mandates that she take good care of said cat. Also, there is always a delay (sometimes a lengthy one) between a person's death and their will being enacted. This isn't a big deal if you are giving your cousin your flat-screen TV but does have to be factored in with animals.

2. Consider setting up a trust for your pet. This may conjure up images of Leona Helmsley, but trusts don't need to involve millions of dollars. You can set aside a reasonable amount of money for the care of your pets (even funding it with a portion of an insurance policy, retirement account, etc.) and designate someone to disburse funds for their care. The person in charge of the money doesn't have to be (and probably shouldn't be) the same person or organization that is the pet's guardian. Don't be concerned that your money will be wasted if your pet dies before the money runs out. You can designate one or more beneficiaries for any funds that are left over.

The peace of mind in knowing that you've provided for your pets needs in case of your death is worth the time and expense of consulting with a lawyer who is knowledgeable about how to include pets in estate plans.

Golden Retrievers A Basic History Lesson

by Nona Kilgore Bauer

"Primarily a hunting dog..." This, the beginning of the second sentence in the Golden Retriever's AKC standard, reflects the origins of the breed and the vision of its Scottish champion, Sir Dudley Marjoriebanks (later known as Lord Tweedmouth).

Most Golden owners know of the legendary Marjoriebanks, an ardent waterfowl enthusiast and dog breeder who dreamed of a canine hunting partner suited to the rough terrain and cold, rugged waters of the English seacoast. Those lofty aspirations, in 1868, launched the historic breeding journey of a superb hunting dog with a waterproof golden coat.

Fast-forward to the 21st-century Golden Retriever. The Golden's unique combination of beauty, biddability, and athleticism easily propelled the breed into the top 10 of AKC-registered breeds. And as its popularity surged, the breed morphed into the "do-it-all retriever" – with prowess in the field diminishing proportionately.

Enter the AKC Hunting Test program. Originally devised by hunting enthusiasts who were

Sophie's Story – a Tragedy

Sophie was diagnosed at about 8 months as needing bilateral patella luxation, and a veterinarian performed that surgery. While the surgery itself does not seem to be the problem now, the post-surgical advice given to the owner – to keep each leg tightly bound to the body to prevent weight-bearing and extension – was contrary to opinions provided by two Board-certified surgeons and a surgical consult at Cornell. As a result there is significant decreased range of motion on both stifle joints, contractures of the hamstring and quadriceps muscles, a grade 4 lateral patellar luxation of the right stifle, and extreme thickening of the left stifle joint. The family has reached the limits of what it can do financially and realize they do not have the resources – financial and otherwise - to provide further. Sophie now moves about by dragging her hindquarters. GRRCNY was asked to accept her with the family's only other alternative being euthanizing. That family understands that we cannot accept Sophie without a foster home that can provide for her.

GRRCNY obtained another surgical consult: while the surgeon tells us he has done hundreds of patella luxation repairs, this is by far the most complicated and risky he has considered. However he is willing to try as long as we know and accept the risk. There is a 25% chance that there will be an acceptable outcome. The relocation of the knees to their proper positions is not the largest challenge of the surgery. Muscle constrictures must be removed by severing, hamstring constrictures may be severed and possible stretched by the eventual physical therapy. And recovery for hind limb abnormalities requires one good leg to weight-bear while the afflicted leg is recovering: in this case, there is no good leg.

Sophie is now 16 months old, extremely sweet and loving in spite of the obvious pain she is in. While financial considerations are an issue, an even more daunting issue is a need for a foster home that is willing and able to:

- * provide care for Sophie in a home without steps.
- * be physically able to carry Sophie in and out of the house for as long as necessary and to support her minimal weight bearing at first after surgery.
- * be willing to provide daily active and passive range of motion exercises to the point of pain (as a surgeon explained, "PT" doesn't make a difference unless its provided beyond that pain threshold).
- * accept the risk that the surgery and the following PT may not succeed.

While my major point in sharing this story with you is for the search of a foster home, another message I hope to share is this: be wary about a veterinarian who may suggest that he/she provide surgery and treatments beyond his/her knowledge and ability level. Seek second opinions. If this happened to a human there would be a malpractice case but no such redress exists for companion animals that are considered "property" in New York State. If this went to court and was "successful" the most the owner could regain would be the cost of the dog and that was practically nothing in this case.

While the rewards of rescue work are many, the heartbreaks are many, too.

determined to provide a venue for the hunting retriever, the non-competitive testing program served an important need in the world of sporting dogs. As retriever field trials had grown more competitive and more expensive, many Golden owner/trial-hopefuls found they could no longer afford the time and money required to maintain a competitive field trial dog.

Hunt tests bridged that gap, offering wannabe trialers, as well as hunters, a chance to prove the working abilities of their dogs. The tests also encouraged conformation and obedience competitors, and even pet owners, to demonstrate the original purpose of their dogs.

Conversely, the testing process also inspired some test participants to venture into the intimidating world of field trials. Thrilled by the sight of their own or someone else's Golden flying through the tests with speed and style and working head-to-head with Labrador owners, some Golden owners wanted more – bigger challenges and more-competitive dogs. Having witnessed Golden retrievers with superior intensity and drive working with true passion for the game, they promised themselves a dog like that one “next time.”

As the hunt-test program continues to grow, it can only benefit the Golden Retriever and bring him back to his roots as a superior hunting companion who can, indeed, do it all.

Building the Future

Those of us who are active in the dog fancy have heard, in some shape or form, the sentiment that kids are the future of our sport. How true that can be! But where are those kids found?

Of course there are the ones who are born and raised in families already active in the sport of dogs. These kids often have a built-in network of resources and have been going to dog shows in some form since they were small – you can say dog shows are in their blood.

Then there are the ones who are “discovered” through various activities with their dogs. As obedience instructors, Tom and I love to see kids coming to class and wanting to be active participants. Some of these kids can really go far with some gentle mentoring. A case in point – Logan, a six year old boy who went through Tom’s beginner obedience class last spring with one of the family’s dogs, a six year old Australian Cattle Dog – both boy and dog were the same age! Logan and Ranger were a great team and watching Logan gain confidence as the classes progressed was heartwarming for everyone, they also became the role models for all the adults in the class. Logan and Ranger passed the class with flying colors, and Tom encouraged Logan further by presenting him with a special accomplishment ribbon at graduation. They then went on to earn a Canine Good Citizen certification in early summer and started agility foundation handling classes – though there were days when Ranger couldn’t see the point of these exercises and Logan would get frustrated with Ranger’s stubbornness. They are typical six year olds, after all. I also have to note that mom was not meddlesome, letting Logan work with Ranger during class while she sat on the sidelines taking notes and asking questions after the session was over. Logan also helped out at our local club’s agility trial last month, allowing him a front row seat to the action and really giving him a picture of what he is working toward in agility classes. It was amazing to see his enthusiasm in planning his training schedule, and desire to leave early so he could get to it!

So, you may ask how you can help encourage youngsters to get involved with the sport of dogs? Is there a dog-oriented 4-H group in your area? If there isn’t one specifically dog-oriented, maybe working with a general 4-H group may lead to a special interest group. Maybe you can work through a canine ambassador program with local grade schools. If you teach, keep your eye out for the family with young kids who are interested in the class. Mentor a neighbor kid who has expressed a fondness for your dogs.

Offer to do presentations. Do you participate in a particular venue that the kids might like a demonstration of? How about doing a talk on responsible pet ownership? How to do basic grooming? What is involved in doing therapy work? What is the role of a service dog? The options are many.

We have all gained life experience by being involved with our dogs – passing this on to today’s youth will go a long way toward assuring future generations enjoy canine activities.

completing her UD and earning a bumper leg. Fanny was required to compete in Utility B because Bruce had earned an OTCH with a previous dog (Leo).

Judi Questel reports Moya (Bonefeathers Farscape Moya CDX RAE MX MXJ NF CCA; Can CDX AgI AgIJ) has been moved into Preferred agility classes and is having a blast on the courses. In only seven days of trials she has completed her Novice Agility Preferred (NAP), Novice Jumpers Preferred (NJP), Open Agility Preferred (OAP) and Open Jumpers Preferred (OJP) titles. Out of her 12 qualifying scores to earn the four titles, 11 were first place and the 12th was a third place.
